What is Art History?

Art History is the study of how and why the human race has produced images throughout its history. Images, whether they pertain to fine art or to popular culture, are everywhere and express and influence the ways we feel, think, and act. The Art History program at St. Bonaventure examines the image as it exists throughout human culture and in our contemporary world. The visual literacy that results from this course of study will equip the student with skills for understanding past societies and engaging our image saturated contemporary culture with purpose and vision.

Why Art History at St. Bonaventure?

Because the image is a part of every level of human society, the Art History Program at St. Bonaventure is purposely interdisciplinary in both its approach and content. Around a core of art history professionals, the faculty is drawn from various disciplines at the university in order to better demonstrate the pervasive presence and influence of the image in all of human life and to sharpen a solid art historical training with the insights and methods of other disciplines. It is an equally fundamental aim of the program to provide students with a variety of options that will allow maximum flexibility while establishing a sound basis in the field of art history. Various tracks have been developed which allow a student to concentrate on any one of selected areas within Art History that suits the student’s individual interest and provides a ground work for specialization.

The Art History program is closely associated with the Quick Center for the Arts. The resources, exhibits, and facilities are at the disposal of students participating in the program.

Museum Studies and Study Abroad

Museum Studies is offered as one of five concentrations for the major in art history. Museum internships are available to qualified students at the appropriate point in their course of study, and can be completed at either St. Bonaventure’s own Regina A. Quick Center for the Arts, or at other U.S. or foreign museums. In the latter case, internships are combined with opportunities to study abroad, and we enjoy ties to educational programs in Florence and Perugia, Italy, and Barcelona, Spain.
