

Questions to Ask the Interviewer

An employer wants to hire someone who has made an effort to research the organization and has prepared intelligent questions. The following are sample questions. Review and revise these questions to be appropriate for the position and organizations for which you are interviewing.

- What personality traits and qualities do you consider critical to success in the position?
- What skills do you find most valuable in an employee?
- What do you see as the strengths of this department/organization?
- What does the department/organization hope to achieve in the next two or three years?
- What attracted you to this organization? Why do you enjoy working for this company?
