The Study of Nonviolence

Why does nonviolence require more courage than violence?

How, when losing your cool, can you maintain control and self discipline?

How was Gandhi able to predict the nonviolent civil rights movement in the U.S. before Martin Luther King Jr. was 10 years old?

Why do nations persist in using violence as policy despite thousands of years of evidence that nonviolence works more effectively?

These questions and many others represent the core of the program in nonviolence at St. Bonaventure University, one of the longest-standing peace studies programs in the world. The program offers more courses in nonviolence than any other program in the United States, and is unique among the 350 other peace studies programs in the country in part because of its emphasis on nonviolence as a way of life and not just a strategy for gaining success.

Curriculum

Students wishing to complete a minor in nonviolence must complete six courses:

- Introduction to Nonviolence and Conflict Resolution
- Violence: Its Causes and Effects;
- Any 200-level nonviolence course;
- The Philosophy of Nonviolence; and
- any other two courses from more than 30 options. Visit www.sbu.edu/nonviolence for more information.

Students interested in nonviolence may design their own courses of study in nonviolence as an interdisciplinary major. They may also pursue a minor in nonviolence through an already-approved course of study.

About the Director

Dr. Barry L. Gan, professor of philosophy, is the author of Violence and Nonviolence: An Introduction, and co-editor (with Robert L. Holmes) of Nonviolence in Theory and Practice, a leading anthology of writings about nonviolence.

He served for two years as president, and three years as executive director, of Concerned Philosophers for Peace, a North American association of philosophers that has been in existence since 1981.

Gan was editor of The Acorn: Journal of the Gandhi-King Society for 25 years, and for two years was co-editor of Peace and Change: A Journal of Peace Research, the journal of the Peace History Society and the Peace and Justice Studies Association. He also served for two years as program committee chair of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, the oldest and largest interfaith peace group in the United States.

Gan has taught at St. Bonaventure since 1984, which is when he earned his Ph.D. in philosophy from the University of Rochester. He received his M.S. in philosophy from U. of R. in 1981. Prior to joining the faculty at St. Bonaventure he taught high school and junior high English for six years.
